The West Somerset Railway is almost complete, and once we've finished the track gauge conversion it'll be ready to run. But before you can run your steam engines on the West Somerset Railway you need to get your hands on a copy of Train Sim World® 2. As its name suggests, this is a track-rail add-on that will provide you with ready-to-run Scenery and Virtual Scenery, not to mention all the accompanying scenery. The Virtual Scenery is based on the real West Somerset Railway and includes buildings and sheds, a level crossing, a tunnel and tunnels for all sections. As you would expect from a track-rail add-on, the scenery is not part of the track, so you will need to build your own track. The scenery can be placed directly on top of your existing layout or alongside it. There are two points you need to note when using this add-on with any track you have already laid. Firstly, you need to ensure the tracks have not yet been connected to the track gauge of your Train Sim World. As outlined in our lesson on setting a specific gauge, you need to have the setting on both the layout and the Scenery or Virtual Scenery match if they are to be used together. Secondly, there are two points that should always be matched when using the Scenery or Virtual Scenery with a railway that is built of different lengths. The first is to ensure both the layout and the scenery are built to the appropriate length. For example, if your layout is 1:43.8", you would need to ensure that the scenery is also 1:43.8". If you build your own track, then you will also need to consider that your track will be built at different lengths. If you build your own track, you should set your length to be as close as possible to what you have in the Scenery or Virtual Scenery. This will ensure that you have the same level of detail wherever you place the scenery. Starry Moon Island Mobile Stronghold MP02 Features Key:

Fight for your life in the Kremlin during the Great Patriotic War!
Look out for enemy missiles that can destroy you on screen
Make tactical choices based on the information at hand
Play hour after hour, as you fight for your survival in the real-time environment of a warzone

The Shift to Games, like the one that we had with our prototype of the HELLMOND game, changed our genre in a big way!
As far as we know the HELLMOND series was the first and only vervet prototype game that ever offered real-time gameplay focused on a WW2 setting!
Now we are back with another game of this nature, one that will bring the ZX Spectrum to life, again!

The Game

The game is based on a story that follows the events that took place in the Kremlin during World War II. You will be thrown into a number of missions: you will have to fight against the Soviets and Germans, make lots of maps, collect armors and upgrades, gather weapon drops, fight as a bomber against enemy forces and much more.

The core component of this game is played in real-time, it doesn't require a gamepad and it is already very immersive!

Anyone who likes to sneak in back-alley fights with sports cars will be delighted by this isometric throwback. The combo-heavy game has you backing your car into a much smaller enemy, then punishing them with both torpedoes and missiles. You can spend your points wisely by upgrading your car or equipment before firing off any attacks. And every time you get hit, the timing of your next move is controlled with the joystick. Gears and Run was a great modern classic, and it was great on the Amiga. The keyboard was great to have at that time, and the very effective toggle between N and S was also helpful. I think the game originally included both keyboards, but that didn't last. Gears and Run was a great modern classic, and it was great on the Amiga. What's new:

How to Impress a Stalking German Shepherd Dog! Okay, I'll admit. I'm a stalker. I once lived in a neighborhood where the average resident walked their dog. A large, German Shepherd-type dog, always eager to bark as you walked by — and when you looked back over your shoulder, you could stare right into the dog's eyes. I could tell you the exact moment in time when their owner sent them off in the direction of a stranger. Oh, how I missed that. The German Shepherd Husky, also, are the stalker of their breed. Loveable, yes, but so much better off walking with you than following you uninvited. Given the yearning of the German Shepherd / Husky to stalk and to be followed, I should have been able to give up my habit of following people when I moved to San Diego, a town full of people with German Shepherds and Huskies. Except for that one time when my dog went running off to follow me when I was petting her down the street, that is, and she chased a 13-year-old through a parking lot, possibly causing all sorts of legal problems I don't know about. I can always be accused of an overly friendly dog. Many years later, I had another time where I was following a street musician, playing a harp and just strumming. While I love the music, I was a little edgy since this was a quiet location for traffic, and because I live in a busy suburban neighborhood. German Shepherd Huskies are trained as police dogs, so I don't think I'd have received very good reception from the boys and girls of the K-9 division. Other dogs barked and barked, but that German Shepherd only stood there and looked all tense, growling, and barking. After a while, I gave up the bass lines, but the haunting melody continued. Soon a similar incident happened with another stranger walking her dog. She was also a harp player. I quickly stopped listening to the music, but I followed her down the sidewalk, still keeping a distance. I was starting to feel the effects of Grandma's Dr. Pepper so I stopped at a deli for a soda. I had just the right music playing in my head when I heard a young male voice say, "Hey, would you stop

Abilities — Unlock abilities by spending experience

The Storm League needs heroes. Enter new players. Sometimes you get lucky and your new players get really lucky.

From now until the end of summer, you can join any season and receive a prize. Everyone has a slight advantage. New season are harder to win the league so they give more experience!

But not everyone gets the same experience though.

Some players get a regular boost, while others get to unlock special abilities.

The special abilities might make you look cool. Or they might make you a god. It depends.

All of these abilities require experience to use and all of them are permanent.
